Professionals in the fields of education and health sciences are challenged with a complex global reality. Awareness of global developments and cross-cultural competencies are crucial in dealing with differences and learning from people of other cultures.

Our Global Scholars Program is designed to prepare professionals for this international state of affairs. The Global Scholars Program (GSP) can be earned in your program in the College of Education and Health Sciences regardless of your major. Your designation as a Global Scholar will assist you in job searches in your profession.

As a Global Scholar you will...

- ◆ demonstrate increased awareness and appreciation of cultural, ethnic, and disciplinary backgrounds.
- ◆ identify and analyze crucial factors in developing global and cross-cultural communication and attending to issues of diversity in your profession.
- ◆ demonstrate greater awareness for global perspectives in communication, collaboration, diversity, and professional networking.
- ◆ collaborate and communicate effectively with colleagues and other professionals within one's own and other cultures.
- ◆ demonstrate aspects of international culture and human behavior.

"My time studying with Bradley in London, Munich, and Igls gave me a new perspective on my cultural identity and people of other countries. Through an independent study retail project, I saw how culture affects visual merchandising strategy which will help me in my career. Seeing theatre productions and artwork in London opened my eyes to differences in what is culturally acceptable. This experience has helped me understand cultural differences and similarities which will serve me well in our globally-oriented society."
