

ENG305-03 Advanced Writing – Technical Writing

Dr. Peter Dusenbery

This course focuses on writing in professional and work situations. In addition to a semester long formal report project, students will complete several short correspondence and report projects. All assignments target real or realistic audiences. Each assignment unit includes a planning step, draft review, and final draft.

ENG 305-05 Advanced Writing – Technical Writing

Professor Eric Kumpf

ENG 305 Technical Writing will explore ways to improve your ability to communicate technology to users who must make decisions based on your writing. We'll focus on the textual, visual, and subject domains of documents and how skill in these three areas can construct your identity as a professional.

During the semester we'll read articles, websites, and chapters that should change the way you think about technical writing and your role as a writer and presenter of information. Once you think differently, your finished product, the text and document, should change accordingly, presenting not mere facts, but a text that considers the needs of your readers and helps identify you as a contributing member of your professional field.
