An informational interview is a meeting with a networking contact, preferably face-to-face. Prepare as if it were an actual job interview: background research, careful question formulation, and business etiquette are critical. This contact could lead to a potential job offer.

- Learn about the day-to-day responsibilities of those employed in your field of interest.
- Determine potential career paths with a specific employer or within an industry.
- Gain knowledge about recruiting practices of a specific employer or industry.
- Identify other contacts who may be helpful in the job search.

Steps to Follow:
1. Identify an appropriate contact (i.e., classmate, former co-worker or supervisor, family contact, faculty member, fellow alumni, or friend). Try using online resources like Facebook, Twitter, or LinkedIn (especially its BU Mentor Group).
2. Telephone or email to request and interview. Explain why you’d like to meet and request a 30-minute appointment, unless the contact offers something longer.
3. Research the contact's organization (try WetFeet.com, RileyGuide.com, and Vault.com).
4. Develop a list of interview questions (see sample questions below). Be creative. Do not copy this list. Avoid asking basic questions that could be answered by visiting the web site.
5. Brush up on your interviewing skills.
6. Dress professionally and arrive 10-15 minutes before the scheduled interview. It is appropriate to take notes but be careful not to let it interfere with your conversation.
7. Send a thank-you note or email immediately following the interview.
8. Update your contact occasionally, by sending a card/email informing about your search and career.
